

Dear Sam,

I hope this letter finds you well! I just had to write to tell you about the newest addition to our family-a bright, chirpy little parakeet! Honestly, I never thought having a bird in the house could be so thrilling, but since bringing him home last weekend, it's been an adventure from the start.

The whole process began when I spotted him at the pet store. There was something so curious and lively about the way he hopped around, almost as if he was trying to say, "Pick me!" After spending nearly an hour watching the birds and debating on which one to choose, I just knew this little guy was meant to come home with me.

Bringing him home was a mix of excitement and nerves. I had set up a cozy cage with plenty of toys and a swing (thanks for your suggestions!), but as soon as I placed him inside, he looked a bit lost and uncertain. For the first few hours, he barely moved and kept glancing around with those tiny, watchful eyes.

But by the next morning, he started exploring, pecking at his toys and even chirping a little. It made me so happy to see him slowly getting comfortable. There were a few minor challenges-getting him to try out his food and convincing him the water dish wasn't scary-but with a little patience, he's coming around.

Every day, I'm amazed by his playful antics and the cheerful sounds he brings to the house. It feels wonderful to have such a bright little companion to look after! I can't wait for you to meet him-you'll love his colorful feathers and cheeky personality.

Hope to see you soon! Write back when you have time and tell me what's new with you.

Take care,
Alex
