

Dear Sam,

Hey there! I hope you're doing well. I just wanted to write and tell you all about the amazing family gathering we had last weekend. Honestly, it was one of the best we've had in ages, and I really wished you could've been there with us!

The house was buzzing with laughter from the moment everyone arrived. Aunt Linda brought her famous chocolate cake (you know how Dad can't resist it!), and even Grandma was dancing around the living room with the little cousins. We played charades after dinner, and you can probably guess who stole the show-yup, Uncle Raj and his wildly funny impersonations!

I also had a long chat with Sophie. We caught up on so much and reminisced about our childhood summers together-those water balloon fights in the backyard and camping in the living room. It was nice to feel that old sense of togetherness again. Later, everyone gathered around the firepit outside, roasted marshmallows, and shared stories. Some of the tales got so silly we were all practically crying with laughter.

I really missed having you there. Family gatherings just aren't the same without you around to crack your jokes and get everyone playing games. Hopefully, you can join us next time-it honestly feels so incomplete without you. Until then, let's keep in touch and maybe plan a little get-together during the holidays?

Take care and write back soon!

Love,
Maya
