

Hey [Friend's Name],

How's it going? I just had to write and tell you about some of the hilarious things that happened during our lunch breaks at school this week â€“ I wish you were there to see it!

On Monday, our table was in fits of laughter when Sam tried to open his juice box, but instead managed to squeeze it a bit too hard. The juice shot straight up and almost hit Mrs. Patel! I thought she'd be mad, but she just laughed and said, â€œThat's one way to get your vitamins.â€

Then on Wednesday, Rita brought her homemade spaghetti, but forgot to pack a fork. She tried to use two pencils as chopsticks â€“ it sort of worked, but she kept dropping noodles everywhere. By the end of lunch, she had more spaghetti on her shirt than in her stomach. We all teased her that she invented a new fashion: â€œPasta Prints.â€

Oh, and you'll love this â€“ yesterday during dodgeball, Ben tripped and somehow managed to roll right into a pile of leaves someone had brought inside. He stood up with leaves sticking out of his hair and shirt, looking like some sort of forest creature. Even the teachers couldn't help laughing!

We really missed you at lunch â€“ nobody else does impressions of the teachers as well as you do. Let me know when you'll come back to visit, we'll save you a spot at our table (and maybe a fork, just in case)!

Write back soon and tell me about any funny stuff happening at your school.

Take care,
