

Hey Bro,

How's it going over there? I hope this letter finds you somewhere between a packed lecture hall and a slightly crumpled pizza box. Things are pretty much the same back home-Mom still insists I should "just call you" every five minutes, and Dad has officially become the world's most persistent texter (his memes haven't gotten any better, by the way).

Seriously though, I can't tell you enough how proud I am of everything you're juggling right now. I know college isn't always a walk in the park-those late-night study marathons and endless assignments can get overwhelming. Remember, you've got this. Don't beat yourself up if things feel tough sometimes; you're just human, and you're already doing amazing. Even when it feels like the work never ends, take a second to appreciate how far you've come.

On the home front, nothing too wild is happening (unless you count the cat knocking over Dad's favorite mug for a fourth time). I've picked up a new hobby-trying to bake mom's lemon cake. Let's just say, you're lucky you're not here to taste my "experiments" yet.

Life can get pretty hectic, but don't forget to take care of yourself while you're chasing those dreams. Get some sleep, eat something besides instant noodles, and try not to live on caffeine alone. And as cliché as it sounds, remember to have a little fun along the way-college is more than just books and deadlines.

Even though we're miles apart, you're always right here with me (and not just because of the embarrassing old photos Mom insists on showing everyone). Keep reaching out, even if it's just a meme or a quick voice message; it makes my day.

If you need to vent, rant, or just laugh about something ridiculous, I'm only a call away. I'm cheering you on every step of the way, and I can't wait to hear all about your latest adventures when you have the time.

Take care of yourself, and remember-no matter what, I've got your back.

Miss you, love you, and can't wait to see you soon.

Your annoying (but awesome) sibling,
[Your Name]
