

Hey [Friend's Name],

I hope you're doing well! I know your exams are just around the corner, so I thought I'd write to share some quick, last-minute revision tips that really helped me when I was in your shoes.

First off, don't try to cram everything. Instead, summarize your notes on key topics. Jot down the most important points, formulas, or anything you're likely to forget. Keep these summaries with you for quick revision.

Practice makes perfect, so if you have past papers or old questions, try working through them. This really helps you get a feel for the kind of questions that might come up and how to manage your time during the actual exam.

Speaking of time, remember to take short breaks while studying. Studying non-stop can make you more tired and less productive. Try the 25-minute study, 5-minute break routine—it really works!

Another thing I found useful was to stay positive. It's easy to get anxious, but keep reminding yourself that you've got this! Visualize yourself doing well and stay confident—it actually helps your brain remember things better.

Don't forget to get enough sleep the night before your exam. You'll think much clearer with a fresh mind than if you pulled an all-nighter.

Wishing you tons of luck! Let me know if you need any more tips or just want to chat. You're going to do great!

All the best,
[Your Name]
