

Hey [Friend's Name],

It feels like ages since we last talked! I thought I'd drop you a letter and fill you in on what life's like here in [New City]. I really miss our random chats and spontaneous hangouts, but I'm also enjoying my new routines and learning a lot from this change of scenery.

My weekdays start super early now—much earlier than back home! The city wakes up a bit before sunrise, so I'm usually out of the apartment by 7:30. Commuting is totally different; instead of a short walk, I now hop on the metro, which winds underground for most of my journey to work. It's crowded, but there's this strange camaraderie among the regulars. I'd take our bike rides back home any day, but I'm getting used to it.

The work culture here is more fast-paced than what I'm used to. Lunch breaks are shorter, but luckily there are dozens of street food stalls nearby. I usually grab something quick-like [local dish]-and people-watch for a few minutes before heading back. Most evenings, I have a bit more free time, since people in this city tend to go out after work rather than during the weekends. I've been exploring local cafes and parks; there's always something buzzing just around the corner.

Weekends here are a whirlwind of festivals and markets. I've started hanging out with a small group from work—they've shown me some really neat spots that have fast become my favorites. There's a different vibe here: people are friendly, but everything feels a touch more hurried than what we're used to. It's exciting, but I miss the laid-back afternoons at our usual haunt.

I've been thinking about how much our daily routines shape who we are. Even though this place is so different, I find myself craving bits of â€œnormalâ€ from back home—things like late-night movies with you or just wandering around with no plan. But I'm adapting, and every day brings something unexpected, which is both challenging and fun.

I'd love to hear all about what's new with you! Any updates on the gang? Has anything changed in our old neighborhood? Write me when you can—I really want to keep this connection strong even if we're miles apart.

Take care and talk soon,

[Your Name]